CONFORMITY ?

The good of our pluralistic society demands a certain degree of conformity from each of us. But when? And where? And how much? Does not our privilege of a Catholic University education impose a special obligation to lead by our example?

(Head of Obstetrics & Gynecology, Women's College Hospital)

Feb. 19 Social & Civic Life

On behalf of the executive and directors I would like to express to all members of the Alumni Association a somewhat belated New Year's greeting.

In this our second newsletter I thought it appropriate to give the purposes of our Association as they appear in the Constitution:

"a) To bring into association the former students of The University of St. Michael's College by promoting a programme of religious, intellectual and social activity.

b) To co-operate with the Faculty of The University of St. Michael's College in furthering its educational objectives.

At present we have under way three projects which are designed to further these ends. Whether or not they are successful will depend upon the co-operation of our members.

The first, and most obvious, project is this quarterly newsletter. However, for regular publication we require a steady flow of news from members. We are counting on the return of a large number of the enclosed questionnaires.

To ensure that the 1963 Homecoming Weekend, our second project, will be worthwhile for visiting Alumni, we have already enlisted the aid of directors outside Toronto in preparing the programme. Watch for our next newsletter for the schedule of events and other pertinent information.

The Lecture Series, details of which appear in this newsletter, is our third project.

We urgently request your suggestions for further ways in which we may strive to achieve the purposes of our Association.

W. H. Broadhurst

President, University of St. Michael's College Alumni Association.

Expanding Horizon

The oldsters among the Alumni, those who are now turning fifty, will recall the days at St. Michael's when Professor Gilson paid his first visits to the College. They were exciting days and out of the visits emerged the Institute of Mediaeval Studies. The Institute is better known outside Canada than within, but it is one of the fixed stars of the Canadian educational galaxy. The old Willison House which was the original home of the Institute, subsequently known as No. 10 Elmsley, is no longer a landmark, having fallen this past summer to the ravages of time and twenty-five years of exuberant undergraduate living.

A new personality has come on the scene at St. Michael's in the person of Father Gregory Baum. Father Baum is an Augustinian. He was born in Berlin of Jewish parents. He came to North America in 1940 a refugee from Nazi oppression. He received his B.A. and M.A. from McMaster and Ohio State respectively. In 1946 he entered the Church and did his doctorate theological studies at Fribourg, specializing in Ecumenical Theology. He joined the staff in Theology at St. Michael's in 1960.

Quietly but effectively Father Baum brought an awareness that the division among Christians is a scandal to the non-Christian world and that division impedes the force of the Gospel. The temporal and secular world of our times is becoming increasingly one, the problems of nations intersect each other more and more, the need for understanding has become imperative. So also in the Church. Christians must remember that Christ prayed for unity. Rabid sectarianism should not be a characteristic of Christian people. The Church which Christ founded to be a dynamic force in the world has lost the initiative in human events. Christian energy has been dissipated by senseless division among Christians, and the division has been engendered and fostered by ignorance and lack of understanding on all sides. This lack of understanding in its turn points up the fact that the charity of Christians towards each other has grown cold.

The awareness of this situation and the resolution to do something about it has prompted the ecumenical movement. It also prompted Father Baum to suggest that St. Michael's undertake the establishment of the Centre of Ecumenical Studies. Like the Institute of Mediaeval Studies, its beginning has been modest. It is presently located in the old Clover Hill wing. The first task is the building up of a library in Ecumenical Theology. It is a graduate research institute. It does not aim at proselytizing. It does hope to promote understanding among Christian scholars by the development of interest in theology and by interest in developing theology.

Perhaps it takes a theologian new to the Toronto campus to realize the possibilities which exist right at home. Father Baum points out that nowhere else in the world can you find five complete theological faculties under different confessional auspices existing a mere stone's throw from each other. Count them: Emmanuel, Wycliffe, Trinity, Knox, St. Michael's. Perhaps it took a man fresh from the German and French theological schools to point out that Catholic theologians here have an unsurpassed opportunity for dialogue with non-Catholic scholars. Perhaps it takes one who has seen the Church from the outside to realize how much can be done for the human family from within. Whatever it took, the Centre of Ecumenical Studies is now a reality.

Father T. Paul Broadhurst, C.S.B. '55, and Father Stanley Kutz, C.S.B., are assisting Father Baum in editing the bi-monthly publication "The Ecumenist", published by the Paulist Press and circulated among academic institutions throughout North America. Professor Bilaniuk, St. Michael's lay theologian from the Oriental Rite, will assist in the work next year.

Father Baum attended the Second Vatican Council as the theologian of the Archbishop of Toronto and a consultor for the Canadian hierarchy. He is a member of Cardinal Bea's Secretariat for Christian Unity. He has also been appointed to the Commission which will prepare the agenda for the next session of the Vatican Council.

From its modest beginning, it is confidently expected that the Centre of Ecumenical Studies will add a unique and distinctive contribution to the world of Catholic scholarship and learning.

Bob Baxter '52, our Director and faithful reporter at the Lakehead writes from Port Arthur: "When I attended St. Michael's, there was a little booklet distributed to residence students entitled "Prayers for Students" which contained, among others, the morning and evening prayers said in private or in groups by all St. Michael's students. Not too long ago I lost mine, and it occurred to me that others might also have done so. It is impossible to estimate how many thousands of us are familiar with these prayers, but no doubt many would appreciate having a bedside copy. This could be a real bond between graduates, and would be a means of cementing the communion of spirit and purpose that, as members of the Mystical Body, we seek."

A much-appreciated suggestion! A copious supply of these booklets is on hand. A mere postcard request to the Alumni Office will bring one to YOU promptly.

Rochester Reporting

Mike PIEHLER '38 sends a generous supply of news from the Rochester area, but is disappointingly reticent about himself.
